

Everybody loves to hate the telemarketers, but when I think of how many things I ordered over the phone I realize this is easy, convenient, secure and inexpensive.

It is just not fair to restrict telephone marketing and ignore the junk mail we receive every day or the Internet pop-ups.

I think there is no need for additional rules, since people can decide for themselves what products they want to buy and what advertise they want to listen to.

How about the TV commercials? Aren't they annoying?

America needs every possible way to sell its products these days, so I don't think new restrictive rules will do anybody any good.

Thank You

Sincerely,

Siviu Golumbeanu